Because Photoshop is such a powerful program for the digital artist, many schools offer Photoshop courses, where beginners and experienced artists can work together to hone their skills. Here are some of the more notable features of Photoshop:

- Layers: Photoshop allows you to work on multiple layers. For example, you can apply a new layer over an existing layer. You can erase, copy, or move the layer, change the layer's blending mode, create selections, and make all kinds of changes to the image on each layer.
- Adjustment layers: These layers allow you to apply changes to specific areas of your image. These changes can be easy or complex, such as making subtle adjustments to fine edges or completely changing the color of the image. Adjustment layers enable you to set specific threshold levels, change the levels of color and black and white, and apply gradients to your images.
- The Fix button: When you select a layer (as opposed to an entire image), the Fix command appears at the top of your screen. It's like the pencil tool in Microsoft Word that lets you draw on your image. You can select a different part of the image to make a selection and then change the options. You can also change the fill color and make minor adjustments to the entire image.
- Complex filters: Filters in Photoshop enable you to enhance or transform your images in various ways, including blurring, desaturating, or making an image pop more.
- Smart Brushes: Smart Brushes enable you to easily create multiple looks and effects by using four options: size, spacing, angle, and spacing. Because they're so easy to use, you can create multiple looks just by dragging and dropping the brush.
- Image-editing tools: There are tools that enable you to crop, edit, and create selections. For example, you can crop your image to remove unwanted areas and merge images together. You can also use selection tools to select a specific area and create a selection.
- Layer effects: Adding a layer effect is one of the easiest ways to enhance your image. You can apply filters, blur your image, use ripple, or even create a duotone effect.
- Guided mode: Guided mode is an easy way to learn how to use Photoshop. It helps you see what you're doing. You don't need to spend your time trying to figure out how to do something. Guided mode also enables you to see the effect of changes you're making by preview

Determination of trace levels of total and cadmium using a sensor based on bismuth-coated silicon nanowires. A novel approach for the highly sensitive determination of trace levels of total and cadmium is presented. The sensing mechanism was based on the metal-enhanced fluorescence of silicon nanowires coated with bismuth. A highly sensitive, rapid and selective method of determining total and cadmium ions in aqueous solution was developed using a simple and convenient strategy for the detection of trace levels of total and cadmium. The minimum amount of bismuth ($0.05 \mu\text{g cm}^{-2}$) that could enhance the fluorescence of silicon nanowires under 365 nm illumination was optimized in an aqueous solution. Bismuth-coated silicon nanowires with high sensitivity for total and cadmium ions were prepared and applied to the determination of total and cadmium. The calibration curves exhibited linearities of 0.45-3.56 nM and 0.10-6.72 nM with a correlation coefficient of $R > 0.991$. The detection limits for total and cadmium ions were 1.06 nM and 0.21 nM, respectively. In addition, selective detection of these ions over other ions was carried out in the optimized conditions.[Photo by: Nickelodeon] It was the fall of 2013, and Nickelodeon was looking for a product designer for a new series pilot. The show runner of the television show “Victorious” was looking for someone to help revolutionize the design of their series. The show’s current style was no longer cutting it for their audience, and the show’s creator, Dan Schneider, and the rest of the production team wanted to make their series “look and feel more like movies and other popular forms of entertainment,” according to a casting notice posted by Nickelodeon’s Vimeo channel on October 16, 2013. In the production team’s post, Schneider describes in depth the brand guidelines the studio is trying to live by. Today, an overwhelming majority of people watch television on a TV screen, and a television show is meant to be experienced that way. Recently, the media industry, and specifically, the television industry, has started to find themselves in the midst of a massive design overhaul.
