Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image processing apparatus and an image processing method for performing a resolution conversion process of input image data in pixels and outputting the resultant image data in pixels, and a computer-readable recording medium storing an image processing program for realizing the method. 2. Description of the Related Art Generally, in a processing system using a computer, a high-resolution image whose resolution is higher than a reference resolution is displayed on a display device with a resolution matching the reference resolution (e.g., a cathode ray tube, a liquid crystal display, or a plasma display). Under the circumstances, there has been proposed a method for performing an image processing called interpolation to set data for pixels at an interpolation position to a value obtained by interpolating input image data for pixels at the interpolation position between adjacent input image data. Specifically, the known method interpolates pixel values of input image data so as to obtain a set of data for a resolution that is an integer multiple of the reference resolution (typically, a resolution half the reference resolution). For example, the known method interpolates the pixel values of the input image data so that the resolution of the image processing apparatus matches the reference resolution. Examples of the known method include a simple method of linearly interpolating the pixel values of the input image data in the case where the input image data is a horizontal line or a vertical line, and an image processing method in which the pixel values of the input image data are roundly interpolated at each pixel position. However, the known methods are not perfect for upsampling (upscaling) of an image, which is image processing for high-resolution images in which the input image data in pixels are enlarged to be output image data in pixels. Especially, when the input image data is a horizontal line or a vertical line, there is a problem of degradation of image quality as compared with an image (output image) obtained by actually upscaling, because a wide dynamic range is included
