What's new:

Thu, 23 Jul 2014 10:55:31 +0000release date pushed back to Sept 2015

We'll be pushing the release date back about a month to Sept 2015 (wich will be just in time for the next CS:GO beta)

But it also means we're gonna need a little bit of time to polish some stuff. 2 months isn't exactly a lot, but it will be worth it.

Sorry again for the long delay and for so many problems we suffered behind the scenes. We want to have a final release as good as it can be and the pressure to publish isn't really helping.

Thu, 23 Jul 2014 09:33:59 +0000>Q: strcat using a pointer Not sure if I did it correctly this time but I think I did. int *str_cat(int *first, int *last) { int first_x, last_x; first_x = first->x; last_x = last->x; int *dest = new int; strcat(dest,first_x); *first = *dest; return first; } From my understanding, this returns the data of 'dest' so first_x should be first, but it is only called first;dest because dest doesn't change the value. The other way around, it works fine. It works with just strcat(), is there a way of doing it with strncat()? unsigned int *strn_cat(unsigned *first, unsigned *last) {
