I just hope it's not true that your PC is infected by any virus or malwares. An antivirus could have even alert you of that.However, there are few reasons why you may always need to consult a professional. 1) A professional will understand your need better.2) A professional has a better understanding of the security arrangements in place on your PC.3) A professional can monitor your system for potential issues.4) You can easily trust your professional because of his/her reputation.5) A professional service is usually more affordable and less risky.

I'm currently doing work on an anti-virus program, and am trying to decide between using Quick Heal or AVAST! Would like to get the opinions of fellow Programmers. An antivirus scan should protect you against common virus infections; it is your task to know your systems and to stay aware of the risks involved. One of the biggest things an AntiVirus can do is to create an audit trail for Windows: Where were the files that were executed? Who opened the files that were executed? If you can, try a scan without any Program installed, see if the programs that are already installed will be protected. Don't expect it to scan and report everything, the AntiVirus products are very limited in what they can do. If you are new to Windows, it is a good idea to get a knowledgebase up in the Look for Help menu. If you believe in feedback, you can give your AntiVirus manufacturer ideas on how to improve a product. They are for listening, not talking back to you. Keep in mind that installing an AntiVirus program will not make your computer free from viruses, if you don't take the time and make the effort to do your own maintenance, you will always be one step behind. If you use a computer, it is your responsibility to stay up-to-date with all programs that are provided by your operating system and by those you install yourself. Windows is the most popular operating system world-wide, that's why we choose to focus on it. Keep in mind that most Windows-related security problems relate to the File Association, not to the AntiVirus program. Many people say that anti-viruses make their computers slower. First, let's decide if anti-virus makes a computer slower or not. When you install the software, it will need some time to do a scan of your system. During that
