Birthday! Happy Birthday!! Yes, my baby is getting older. I am so grateful that the doctor was able to catch it early enough so that I was able to stop it growing at it's point. I wish I had known ahead of time, I would have been able to do more to try and prevent it. I will never forget the amazing God who gave me a new life. I can't wait to see what He has in store for me next! Great cake thanks Savita!! I love it. Glad you were able to take the photo. It does look like a fancy dinner party does it? I hope you had a great day everyone. I will see you next week!

The technological means to put a tiny electronic chip into people's brains have passed a test that gives hope to those suffering from Parkinson's disease. A tiny electrode implanted into the brain can detect tiny electrical patterns which can be decoded into recognizable patterns of brain activity that are characteristic of different brain functions. The announcement comes from an article in yesterday's online issue of the journal Nature Neuroscience. The research was led by electrical engineers from the University of California at San Diego. The team of researchers say their findings give new hope to patients with Parkinson's disease. One of the primary problems with current treatments for Parkinson's disease is that they don't alter the course of the disease, but just provide relief from symptoms. Many of these drugs can cause severe side effects and they are expensive. To find a treatment that could stop the progression of Parkinson's disease has been a primary focus of researchers. Dopamine and Parkinson's disease The brain chemical dopamine plays an important role in Parkinson's disease. In patients with Parkinson's disease, the dopamine level in the basal ganglia, a group of brain nuclei, is low. Some of the current treatments for Parkinson's disease act by modulating dopamine levels. Drugs such as levodopa help replenish dopamine in the basal ganglia. One of the main limitations of this is that these drugs don't stop disease progression. For instance, the medication that is usually taken at the same time as levodopa, carbidopa, can cause nausea or vomiting. Besides the fact that their are side effects, drugs can only work up to a point; after a while people need another dose. Gene therapy may be the future of treatment A new way to give patients
