The facility will be located in Dandridge Hall, in the Delaware Valley Marriott in Media, PA. The DMC will be open to University and community members to view the high-tech equipment that will be installed. In addition, many of the professional film projects that have been created by the University's graphic arts department will be shown. The new DMC will allow departments across the University to create a variety of interactive films and web content. The facility will be equipped with the latest digital technology: state-of-the-art video editing software, cutting-edge digital cameras, a digital sound editing system, and high-speed Internet connections for faculty and students. The 19-acre Media Campus, located on the campus of the University, will soon add a building, a new road and landscaping to complete the new campus. This is part of a multi-year capital campaign that has raised $88 million to fund new faculty, student, staff, and program space. A number of large gifts have been given to the University, including $3.5 million to the College of Arts & Sciences. "This new digital media facility will help the University produce interactive creative work that engages people in the community and that offers exciting new opportunities for our students to develop their professional skills, and it will enhance our fundraising and alumni engagement," said John Georges, professor, and chair of the University's Graphic Arts Department.

On April 20, the University's Graphic Arts Department hosted an open house for the public, featuring an overview of the facility's capabilities. To see a video of the event, visit The new facility will complement the University's existing equipment and facilities for the graphic arts industry.
